Hello Professors,

I am sending you this email because LA Hacks, our 36 hour collegiate hackathon that is taking place in UCLA's Pauley Pavilion, is less than two weeks away!

We are very excited, but realize that we need to continue working diligently to make sure everything runs smoothly. With that in mind, we are looking for 150-200 volunteers that will work with us at LA Hacks on 5-hour shifts during the weekend of April 11-13th for the event.

We are reaching out to you because we feel that this would be a great opportunity for students in the CS program of Santa Monica College to see first-hand what a large-scale hackathon is like if they aren't able to commit the entire weekend to competing. As well, this experience will be a good addition to a transfer college application, especially to UCLA. An experience that will demonstrate students' interest in UCLA, and its CS program by volunteering at its premiere hackathon.

Students who volunteer will also:

-get free food and beverages for the entire time they are there

-receive a free LA Hacks t-shirt

-be able to listen to speeches from Sam Altman (newly named President of Y Combinator), Alexis Ohanian (Co-Founder and CEO of Reddit), a panel of Y Combinator startup grad founders, and our SURPRISE KEYNOTE SPEAKER.

-watch projects unfold by top programmers from UCLA, USC, Stanford, Berkeley, UCSD, Caltech, HarveyMudd, and competitors from many other universities

-watch demos of final projects, and see how they are judged by industry professionals including the CEO and Founder of Tinder.

-have an excellent opportunity to network and meet like-minded people

If you could please forward this to your students or by announcing on

E-Companion we would really appreciate it, and the emerging Silicon Beach would benefit from it.

Please don't hesitate to contact me if you have any questions.

Best,
